These upper wicks then a strong move southwards suggest to me a strong area of supply. However, they have also made this level a little weaker.
2)The yellow highlighted area is the break of the previous Demand but when it broke out, some new sell orders were place at the area
1)The 2 black lines represent the previous Demand

Test of this DP was the perfect opportunity to push price back higher into the yellow area to fill the remaining sell orders. The wicks are a perfect representation of that. Now that there is big selling going on, ptice can drop.. So to me all the sell orders were gone here
3) This 2 blue candles completely engulf the previous supply to the upside here, so no sell orders here. At least this is how I see it

If you don't mind, I would just like to comment on what you said on your first chart about the upper wicks and the strong supply...
The level with the upper wicks that you marked as strong supply in itself is a retest of a previous supply (look at the candles after the break of your flip zone.

Both of you are absolutely right

It's definitely not a definite winner, as price came back up close to the RBD soon afterwards

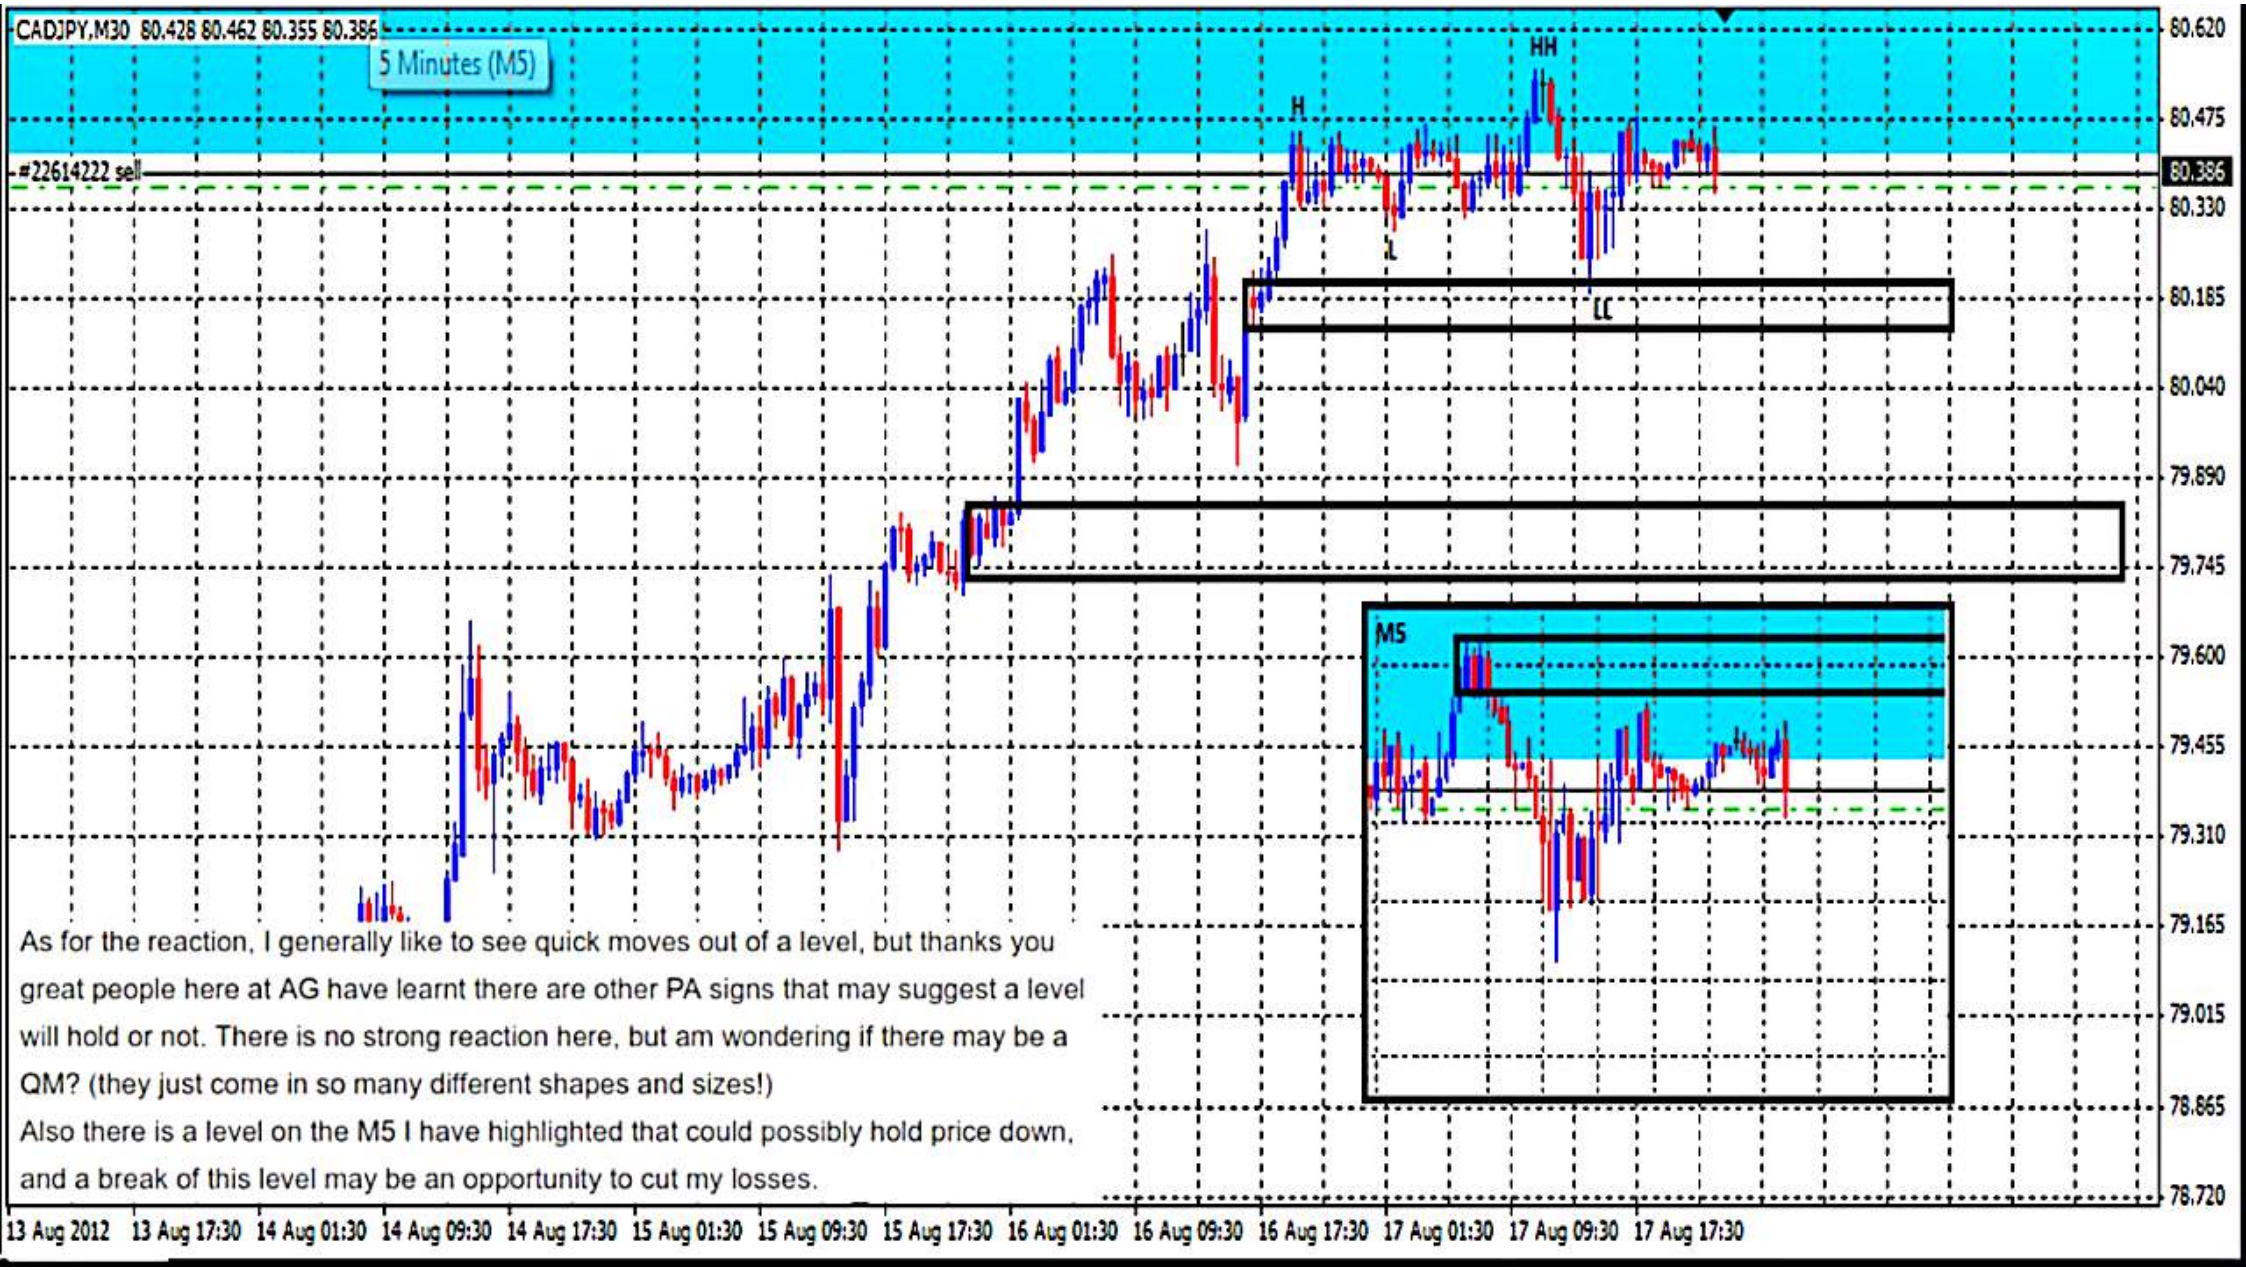
Thank you so much for your comments.
I like that the approach to the level was in quite a strong fasion, but what is a little worrying is the demand created just before the level which was touched (shown on the following H4), and was also very clear on the M30.

CamScanner



As for the reaction, I generally like to see quick moves out of a level, but thanks you great people here at AG have learnt there are other PA signs that may suggest a level will hold or not. There is no strong reaction here, but am wondering if there may be a QM? (they just come in so many different shapes and sizes!)

Also there is a level on the M5 I have highlighted that could possibly hold price down, and a break of this level may be an opportunity to cut my losses.

homerus  Offline Trader

Sure, it can be found in the PIE thread on FF:

Diamonds often occur as an early sign of a reversal and the reason for it is to trap as much retail money as possible, it tends to trap buyers and sellers then resolves very quickly after it completes a cycle of trapping retail.

A diamond represents caution above all else because there is no clear defined momentum either way. But from a price structure point of view, its difficult to hold any position, buy or sell for any period of time or profit. Why diamonds occur near reversals is that the market wants to take out all buyers and sellers and then resolve quickly and the shape of the diamond does that. Its a trend traders nightmare and a scalpers or range traders ideal situation.

If,

On the Weekly the flip zone is very clear . So if this was a 5min, I'll look at M1 to see if I can find a nice fresh base at the flip zone and I'll try to ride this thing down untill the cp is engulfed...
If I couldn't find a nice fresh base in M1 then I'll pass the trade. I'll look to see how price can test the upper supply zones that you marked.

This is a very clean flip zone on the weekly but I so like to see a clear base before the break in my normal analysis...

Yup. Do watch out for that turquoise band at the top of the pole - the top of a pole can be the base of a flag. It may hit the daily supply TL too and turn DTL. From what I've seen though, you have a good understanding of how to handle the PA

I very much wanted to take this touch trade from the DP on OIL - but something stopped me from pulling the trigger...

...I know my biggest problem in this game is sticking with my analysis, too many times I decide against my analysis or cancel a trade I'm in before my target to see that 90% of the time I would have been better off letting it run. This is my biggest obstacle, and I guess (despite the feeling afterwards) its not the worst problem to have.

Eur/Jpy is looking very appealing to me for longs at the moment. Following is a Daily chart. You can clearly see that price is sitting in a consolidation phase at the moment, but is surrounded by important levels. As price has only recently come out of monthly demand longs are looking very nice indeed. In particular a nice looking RS flip below current price which may be good for a nice bounce. This also looks like it could be a nice bear trap as id imagine breakout traders would be keeping a close eye on this pair. There is also a nice daily supply above current price which would be a lovely target for longs (at least on this TF).

This TF shows a very convincing englulf at this RS with a clear spot for a stop, considering the proximity of M demand I would be comfortable taking longs.
Following is a H4 timeframe you can see a nice bullish engulf, some orders could be left over here (at least I'm hoping). The only thing a little worrying is that price found support at another RS flip just above my marked zone. Which price has seemed to be bouncing off for a decent amount of time.

Very clear RS flip level
Price tried to get back down but failed just before meeting the level, could be a clue to orders sitting there...
H1 shows the level nice and clear. But on the M15 there is a RBR just above the RS flip below, I am not sure if price will break through this level, or if i should scale in if price gets to it. It is that or adjust my position size to allow some more room.

As a regular patient of the doctor, I have been inspired by some of his recent comments on to's silver chart. Looking at AU support for one of it's recent moves northwards. PA will tell :)
My upper line shows that the recent SR had no decent reaction which makes me believe that price will move down to my lower line which shows support for the move up. Will mosey on down to a lower TF when price approaches this zone (If im awake :P)

USDSGD. I have been looking at this supply level for a little while now, and even had a previous pending which was only just missed. Price is nearing all time lows, generally speaking, a place to look for longs. However, as I have learned, price is constantly giving us clues on what it wants to do, and the following is no different. You can see price broke through an area providing clear support and price is now flagging up to the decision to break, which also happens to be nice supply. The bottom red line is a daily engulf which you can't see on the chart due to screen size, but the flagging back to the decision to break lower tells me price wants to visit this area.

Following this is a H4 chart. You can see the clear supply area above current price, but I'm also noticing the 2 previous swing highs acting as resistance, your conventional retail trader would be selling at the lower black line with a stop, you guessed it, at the supply RS flip zone. To me this definitely looks like a worthy area for some shorts. With a very tasty R/R :)

2. Price flags down, finds support and makes a new high.
3. Is this the test we have been waiting for? Let's see what happens..
4. Price does not break the flag at 2, so we keep waiting.
5. Now this test of H4 supply looks like it could be it, but price flags down to 6 and makes one more strong push up, now we know what that means. HERD watching mode on.
7. Now this is the conformaition I would look for, the flag at 6 was engulfed.

Doctor

Good analysis and nice clean charts. Your entry was nice and there may even be another shot at it. Price action does not show a whole lot of interest yet. On the 4hr I wouldnt want to have seen price action where you entered or most of the sweet entry would have been eaten away. A place to look for hesitation is around 92.75, it is old ignored supply and will either get taken out or price will bounce. I would favor a bounce, false bullish move and continued down side for a nice long run to under 81.

Following is a quick scalp I took on AU. It was only a scalp because there has been a clear bullish movement this week and I didn't want to push my luck. H4 flip zone got me looking for a short, and I took it on a M5 supply. TP taken manually at 2:1 as price seemed to be flagging down.

after seeing this compression I took profit at a retest
I took a long here after seeing an engulf to the flip zone
A little bit of a different outcome on my AUDCHF trade, but gotta adapt to the market conditions. This trade was taken after i saw a engulf which tested a flip zone on the M15. Target was higher but after seeing some compression and a small break I took profit at the retest and took a quick scalp short!

How I am currently seeing USD/CHF - Price may move off the flip/engulf. Room to move through compression above recent high, to the next area of interest. Just my thoughts.

This is truly lovely reading and trading. I'm seriously impressed!

Your Swissy area above is a beautiful FTR after strong engulf south - the best area on the chart

We have already seen some posts of AUDCHF. There has been a nice reaction to D supply forming a nice pin. IMO some areas to look at to add shorts:

Another update on oil. Price has reacted to the FTR area quite nicely. The reaction has set up a nice bearish englulf right into some nice compression. Looking good to continue lower.

Reasons for sell:
As shown in the above chart, price has reached an important level, at least through my eyes. As shown in the 5m insert, price formed some supply, ideally I would have liked to see an engulf, but was still happy to give the sell a shot.
